Season of Gratitude

Writing notes is becoming a lost art. I love handwritten letters or cards. There's just something about the time it takes to write one that makes receiving it extra special. Keep stationary and stamps on hand for mailing a quick "thinking of you" or "thank you" note. Grab pens and markers you enjoy writing with specifically for the task. It's always fun to receive mail.

These Alexa Pulitzer cards are stunning for fall. I love the "On The Hunt" design and all the details within it. They are printed on a thick cardstock, making them durable. These cards are perfect for writing any note you want to have delivered.

Personalized stationery makes an excellent gift for anyone... or yourself! These cards are gorgeous, and envelopes are included. The options for colors, fonts, and designs are truly endless. They can be customized to any theme you like. Dear Ellie James also creates personalized gift tags for any occasion. Keep these on hand for class treat bags or holidays.

Sometimes, you just need to jot down a quick note, and this notepad is perfect! You can easily tuck the note inside an envelope to send. I love the fun and colorful "Texarkana" design.

Adults and kids can write notes together! It's never too early to teach thankfulness. These elegant "So Grateful" cards are on theme for this time of year. Kids can use these fill-in-the-blank cards to practice their thank you note-writing craft!

Adult notecards available for $8.50, and kids' note cards available for $9 via For Arts' Sake Gift Shop at the Regional Arts Center

With cheeky sentiments for every occasion, these artfully illustrated greeting cards are the perfect choice. Textured paper frosted with gorgeous hand-glittered accents accompanies each card. The inside of the cards are blank, with an envelope included.
